I had the pleasure of meeting and fishing with Craig, Mr. Auger Buddy, this past weekend and the report has been filed from that trip. I was able to give The Auger Buddy a try as well and totally enjoyed being able to use it.

Craig demonstrated how compact the unit is and folds up quickly to stick into the back of an SUV with minimal effort of assembly. By looking at it, many folks have commented that they felt it looked as if it would be fairly top heavy. But after seeing the width that the ski's are spread apart too, makes it very clear that this unit is very stable once the power auger has been put into the stand.

The Auger Buddy is very rigid and looks like it will be able to withstand the punishments from being used on the ice. The lake that we were fishing just had a coating of a few inches of snow. I wasn't sure how it would handle in the snow and right away those doubts were taken away. I had Craig's 10" Jiffy auger in the stand and went about my business of drilling holes.

Moving The Auger Buddy took little effort to no work at all and by lightly pushing it across the snow, it glided very easy. This product is something that all gas auger users should have as if I would have had to carry that 10" auger; I know that my arms and back would have been sore from the 12 holes that I had drilled. As I drilled a hole, I would lift the auger up and put it back into The Auger Buddy and off to the next hole I went with no effort other than lifting the auger a little bit upwards to get it out of the stand.

While we were fishing, a group came out onto the ice and carrying their power auger with them. It was unfortunate that while they were walking to the area that they wanted to fish, they were having a tough time carrying the auger and actually fell a couple of times. At this point, Craig offered The Auger Buddy to them to try out and when they returned it after drilling all of their holes, were much appreciated for the use and totally enjoyed being able to get around without hurting themselves and getting tired from dragging the auger around.

This was my first exposure to The Auger Buddy and I am totally impressed with how well it worked and the simplicity of moving it around on the ice and snow. If you have a power auger and are getting tired of dragging it around, make sure to check out The Auger Buddy. This product will help you and also make your fishing adventure more enjoyable and you will not feel like you are exhausted after drilling numerous holes.

I highly recommend The Auger Buddy to anyone out there that is dragging their power auger around without it.
